To: FCC Commissioners

Please count me among those who strongly urge the FCC to leave the "paid for" airwaves alone and unregulated. Providers such as XM Radio and Sirius Satellite provide a unique service which clearly must be subscribed to and paid for in order for the consumer to receive it. It provides unique and beneficial forms of information (pinpointed weather & traffic for instance) as well as a broad spectrum of entertainment content. While certain of the programs may be objectionable to some, they are nonetheless valid forms of communication that consumers who are willing to pay for the content should be able to get in an "unfiltered manner".

Regulating "free" over-the-air content is one thing as children can stumble across unsuitable material accidentally. Not so with satellite radio content.
